SEWING MACHINES PRICE, FIFTY DOLLARS.

THE IMPROVEMENTS MADE ON THE placed it at the head of all competition, and to-day it is without a rival. It is as durable as steel and iron can make it. Every Machine of the late case-manners prouse is warranted five years, and a warranted five years, and a warranted furnished with each Machine.

The above cut represents the late improved Machine, which rests flat with the table and runs light and rapidly, and makes the shuttle or lock stitch, uses straight needle, and the celebrated unpus-fixed improved in shape so as to have a portion of the feed on both sides of the needle.

Remember the Fact.

Remember the Fact, that high prices (on sewing machines) do not indicate superiority. The combination, the ring, and the monopoly, all agree on high prices, which they, sooner or later, will be farced to reduce on account of the unprece-dented moid and increasing sales of the NEW WILSON SEWING MACHINE. Please call and examine even if you do not wish to purchase.

Ever and ever the world goes round,
Boaring its burdens and crosses;
Ever and ever the years roll on,
With their tide of sorrows and losses;
Ever and ever the book of life
Boars upon its pages
The weary, weary lay of the heart
Sung through all the ages.

Ever and ever with outstretched hands
We grasp for a solden morrow;
Ever and ever the billows of time
Are freighted with bitter sorrow.
Ever and ever the lips smile on,
That the world may walk in blindness;
Little they know of the heart's wild woo.
When the face looks but with kindness.

Ever and ever the shadows fall
Over the golden mosses;
Ever a gleam from Paradise
Lightens our cares and crosses.
Ever and ever the morning dawns
On hopes that are breathed in gladness
Ever and ever the night brings in
Its tide of bitter sadness.

Ever and ever the eye of God
Looketh upon us with pity:
And ever the light is shown to us,
That gleams from the Golden City.

was home again, in San Francisco, without means and without employment. I tortured my brain for a saving scheme of some kind, and at last a public lecture occurred to me! I sat down and wrote one, in a fever of expectation. I showed it to several friends, but they all show their heads. They said nobody would come to hear me, and I would make a humiliating failure of it. They said that as I had never spoken in public I would break down in the delivery, anyhow. I was disconsolate now. But at last an editor slapped me on the back and told me to "go ahead." He said: "Take the largest house in town, and charge a dollar a ticket." The audacity of the proposition was charming; it seemed fraught with practical worldy wisdom, however. The proprietor of the several theaters indorsed the advice, and said I might have his handsome new opera house at half price—fifty dollars. In sheer desperation I took it—on credit, for sufficient reasons. In three wopers house and fifty dollars worth of printing and advertising, and was the most distressed and frightened creature on the Pacific coast. I could not sleep—who could under such circum."

I could not sleep—who could under such circum-tance structure or dominio, but in all cases they must wear a mask. Ladies creature on the Pacific coast. I could not sleep—who could under such circumstances? For other people there was facetiousness in the line of my posters, but to me it was plaintive with a pang when I wrote it:

"Doors open at 7 o'clock. The trouble will begin at 8.

That line has done good service since. I have even seen it appended to a newspaper advertisement, reminding school pupils in vacation what time next term would begin. As those three days of suspense dragged by I grew more and more unhappy. I had sold two hundred tickets among my personal friends, but I cased these with their costume or dominio, but in all cases they must wear a mask. Ladies with their faces uncovered are forbidden to enter the theater, but the prohibition does not seem to extend to any other part of their person. The hall is very large, and by the removal of the stage is extending to the extreme rear of the size Strauss and his wonderful orchestra. The music, of course, is superb. Herr Strauss is an amiable, benevolent looking man, who thoroughly enjoys the occasion, and who selects the most voluptious waltzes, the sweetest polkas, the I have even seen it appended to a news-paper advertisement, reminding school pupils in vacation what time next term would begin. As those three days of suspense dragged by I grew more and more unhappy. I had sold two hundred tickets among my personal friends, but I feared they might not come. My lec-ture, which had seemed "humorous" to me at first, grew steadily more and more dreary till not a vestige of fun seemed left, and I grieved that I could not bring a coffin on the stage and turn the thing casion, and who selects the most volup-tious waltzes, the sweetest polkas, the choicest operatic airs. But the noisy auditory, and the consequest necessity for loud music, render it somewhat bois-terous and less pleasing to a purely es-thetic taste. Nevertheless it is grand, magnificent and almost reconciles one to the occasion which has brought it lett, and I greved that I could not brigg a coffin on the stage and turn the thing into a funeral. I was so panie-stricken at last that I went to three old friends, giants in stature, cordial by nature and stormy-voiced, and said:

"This thing is going to be a failure; the jokes in it are so dim that nobody will ever see them. I would like to have you sit in the parquette and help me forth.

For five hours from midnight Saturday until five o'clock Sunday morning, Herr Strauss is autocrat of the situa-tion. The soldiers who stand about are ornamental, but not useful. Even the from mental, but not useful. Even the floor managers serve no purpose except to remove occasionally a "lady," who, in order to breathe has incautiously lifted her mask. It is Strauss' baton which sways the vast throng, giving the signal for a pause and the resumption of conversation, or the signal for the dance with the waving of countless gay costumes, the clatter of heels, the antics of men and women throwing themselves, in a desperate spirit of rivalry, into the you sit in the parquette and help me They said they would. Then I went to They said they would. Then I went to the wife of a popular citizen, and said that if she was willing to do me a very great kindness I would be glad if she and her husband would sit prominently in the left-hand stage box, where the whole house could see them. I explained that I should need help, and would turn toward her and smile, as a signal, when I had been delivered of an obscure joke—"and then," I answered, "don't wait to investigate, but respond!" in a desperate spirit of rivalry, into the jollity of the can-can, into the lively polks or the lascivious waltz; it is Gerinvestigate, but respond!"

She promised. Down the street I met a man I had never seen before. He had many again master of France, but it is Strauss baton instead of Moltke's sword. Doubtless there is a certain degree of real spirit in the affair. But the sincere love of fun has long since disap-a man I had never seen before. He had been drinking, and was beaming with smiles and good nature. He said:

"My name is Sawyer. You don't know me, but that don't matter. I havn't got a cent, but if you knew how bad I wanted to laugh you would give me a ticket. Come, now, what do you say?"

"Is your laugh hung on a hair-trigger? that is, is it critical, or can it get off easy?"

My drawling infirmity of speech so affected him that he laughed a specimen or two that struck me as being about the article I wanted, and I gave him a ticket go home to moralize on the dissolute-go home to moralize on the dissoluteness of French life. If such moralizing be a little out of place it is none the less just. From its original purpose the opera ball has become a mere rendez-vous where the vilest of women meet their masculine correlatives. Mild Mannered Susan

Susan B. Anthony was on hand at the Washington gathering of distressed females a few days ago, and when an at-tack was made upon Mrs. Woodhull, this is what Susan said: Mrs. Woodhull has been abused, but not half as much as I have. I have been on the platform for twenty years as an advocate for equal rights, and have been scoffed and scerned. You have killed off women in a moment by pointing at them the finger of scorn, but we don't propose to die so easily now that our cause carries strength. I don't propose to proscribe any class: I should gladly welcome all the infamous women in New York, and sit side by side not wait for half-past seven; I wanted to face the horror and end it—the feeling

If a youth is woolingly disposed toward any damsel, as he values his happiness, let him call on that lady when she least knew what I was about I was in the mind die of the stage, staring at a sea of faces, bewildered by the tierce glare of lights, and quaking in every limb with a terror that seemed like to take my life away. The house was full—ainle and all!
